

Seed Across Snow

POETRY BY
Kathleen Driskell

Seed Across Snow

Kathleen Driskell

Seed Across Snow

Poetry by Kathleen Driskell

ISBN: 978-1-59709-150-3

Binding: Tradepaper

Size: 6 x 9; Pages: 96

Pub Date: April 1, 2009

Price: US $18.95

Just as spring struggles to break through late winter, in Kathleen Driskell's new poetry collection, Seed Across Snow, understanding attempts to thaw untended griefs, long dormant. With her husband and two children, poet and teacher Kathleen lives in an old country church built before The Civil War. After beginning the renovation of her new home, she soon discovered the church was rumored to be haunted, along with a handful of other marked spots in their rural community. The area's legends are rooted in a nearby train trestle where several teen-agers have fallen to their deaths over past decades.

Indeed, her community does seem to be inhabited by dark spirits. Driskell's home and neighbors are the subjects of the poems in her new collection of poems, Seed Across Snow.

"Overture," a collage poem, introduces the book and is filled with images that serve as a preface for the poems that follow. In colorful lyric and complex narrative, Driskell's poems center on the recent tragedies surrounding her family's home in an old church rumored to be haunted—a neighbor nearly killed while fetching her mail, a girl abducted and left for dead on the highway behind her house, the drownings of two boys in a local creek. Poems are bound, too, with old sorrows from her past. Each memory that surfaces while living in the old church with its small graveyard next door, reminds that the most sacred, the family, is also the most fragile.

Kathleen Driskell's audacious and complex Seed across Snow is a stunning book. Reading Driskell's poems is like looking into the luminous wonder of a shell or a feather, so straightforwardly identifiable yet so mysterious in its formation. She writes of the terrifying danger of the ordinary, loved ones in daily situations that could threaten their existence—or change the world. Driskell makes a poetry of emergencies alternating with a deep appreciation of those moments in life when all is well. With humor, sass, a luxuriance of line and a sense of our interior worlds so sure that she can follow a thread of feeling to a knot of thought and back through the thought to feeling again, Kathleen Driskell gives us important poetry, brilliant and necessary.

—Molly Peacock, author of The Second Blush, Norton 2008

Red Hen Press • P.O. Box 3537 • Granada Hills, CA 91394 • www.redhen.org

Red Hen Press is a small nonprofit literary press founded in 1994.  Please support small independent presses who keep cutting edge literature alive.

News from

Red Hen Press

P.O. BOX 3537 • GRANADA HILLS, CA 91394 • (818) 831-0649 • fax: (818) 831-6659

Book Description

Just as spring struggles to break through late winter, in Kathleen Driskell's new poetry collection, Seed Across Snow, understanding attempts to thaw untended griefs, long dormant. In colorful lyric and complex narrative, Driskell's poems center on recent tragedies surrounding her family's home in an old church rumored to be haunted—a neighbor nearly killed while fetching her mail, a girl abducted and left for dead on the highway behind her house, the drownings of two boys in a local creek. Poems are bound, too, with old sorrows from her past. Each memory that surfaces while living in the old church with its small graveyard next door, reminds that the most sacred, the family, is also the most fragile.

Praise for Seed Across Snow

Early in Seed Across Snow, Kathleen Driskell asks “what do we have but the past to parent us?”—and the poems show us myriad lessons in mortality and humility learned from tending to memory and its various complexities. But Driskell is also concerned with the present and its “hurtful glory,” the natural world, children, and family. Her poems about love in the context of a long marriage, something all too rarely experienced and even more rarely well expressed, are finely wrought and particularly beautiful. Mining the domestic to find in the most ordinary closet or attic figurative richness, Driskell writes with formal poise, precision, and spirited wisdom.

—Claudia Emerson, author of Late Wife, winner of the 2006 Pulitzer for Poetry

Kathleen Driskell's audacious and complex Seed across Snow is a stunning book. Reading Driskell's poems is like looking into the luminous wonder of a shell or a feather, so straightforwardly identifiable yet so mysterious in its formation. She writes of the terrifying danger of the ordinary, loved ones in daily situations that could threaten their existence—or change the world. Driskell makes a poetry of emergencies alternating with a deep appreciation of those moments in life when all is well. With humor, sass, a luxuriance of line and a sense of our interior worlds so sure that she can follow a thread of feeling to a knot of thought and back through the thought to feeling again, Kathleen Driskell gives us important poetry, brilliant and necessary.

—Molly Peacock, author of The Second Blush, Norton 2008

News from

Red Hen Press

P.O. BOX 3537 • GRANADA HILLS, CA 91394 • (818) 831-0649 • fax: (818) 831-6659

Author Biography

Award-winning poet and teacher Kathleen Driskell serves as the Associate Program Director of Spalding University's brief-residency Master of Fine Arts in Writing Program in Louisville, Kentucky, where she is Associate Professor of Creative Writing. In addition to her best-selling collection of poems Seed Across Snow, she is the author of one previous book of poetry, Laughing Sickness (in its second printing), and the editor of two anthologies of creative writing. Her poems have appeared in many nationally known literary magazines including North American Review, The Southern Review, and The Greensboro Review. Kathleen lives with her husband and two children in an old country church built before The American Civil War.

Press for Seed Across Snow

Poetry Foundation's Best-Seller List

Seed Across Snow has been listed as a national bestseller by the Poetry Foundation.

Linda Elisabeth Beattie of The Courier-Journal, Review

In February of 2009, Linda Elisabeth Beattie wrote a special for The Courier-Journal, praising Driskell's writing with lush examples.

Click HERE to read the full review.

Additional Information

For additional information visit Red Hen Press at: www.redhen.org.

Events

For a listing of author appearances, visit Red Hen Press at: www.redhen.org.

Review Copies, Author Interviews & Excerpts

To request a review copy, schedule an author interview, or obtain more information regarding publishing an excerpt contact Jin Kim, Publicity Assistant, at redhenpress6@verizon.net.

Examination Copies

Please refer requests for examination copies to the Chicago Distribution Center. They can be contacted at 800-621-2736.

News from

Red Hen Press

P.O. BOX 3537 • GRANADA HILLS, CA 91394 • (818) 831-0649 • fax: (818) 831-6659

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE APRIL 1, 2009

Seed Across Snow

by

Kathleen Driskell

Just as spring struggles to break through late winter, in Kathleen Driskell's new poetry collection, Seed Across Snow, understanding attempts to thaw untended griefs, long dormant. In colorful lyric and complex narrative, Driskell's poems center on recent tragedies surrounding her family's home in an old church rumored to be haunted—a neighbor nearly killed while fetching her mail, a girl abducted and left for dead on the highway behind her house, the drownings of two boys in a local creek. Poems are bound, too, with old sorrows from her past. Each memory that surfaces while living in the old church with its small graveyard next door, reminds that the most sacred, the family, is also the most fragile.

Seed Across Snow

Poetry by Kathleen Driskell

ISBN: 978-1-59709-150-3

6 x 9; Trade paper

96 pages

PRICE: US $18.95

Award-winning poet and teacher Kathleen Driskell serves as the Associate Program Director of Spalding University's brief-residency Master of Fine Arts in Writing Program in Louisville, Kentucky, where she is Associate Professor of Creative Writing. In addition to her best-selling collection of poems Seed Across Snow, she is the author of one previous book of poetry, Laughing Sickness (in its second printing), and the editor of two anthologies of creative writing. Her poems have appeared in many nationally known literary magazines including North American Review, The Southern Review, and The Greensboro Review. Kathleen lives with her husband and two children in an old country church built before The American Civil War.

Praise for Seed Across Snow

Early in Seed Across Snow, Kathleen Driskell asks “what do we have but the past to parent us?”—and the poems show us myriad lessons in mortality and humility learned from tending to memory and its various complexities. But Driskell is also concerned with the present and its “hurtful glory,” the natural world, children, and family. Her poems about love in the context of a long marriage, something all too rarely experienced and even more rarely well expressed, are finely wrought and particularly beautiful. Mining the domestic to find in the most ordinary closet or attic figurative richness, Driskell writes with formal poise, precision, and spirited wisdom.

—Claudia Emerson, author of Late Wife, winner of the 2006 Pulitzer for Poetry

News from

Red Hen Press

P.O. BOX 3537 • GRANADA HILLS, CA 91394 • (818) 831-0649 • fax: (818) 831-6659

ORDER FORM

Title	# of copies	Total

SHIPPING:

Shipping and handling is $3.00 for the first book and $1.00 for each additional book thereafter. Books will be shipped via USPS bookrate. Please allow 4 weeks for delivery. Add an additional $1.00 per book for first class & UPS and $2.00 per book for foreign orders.

Subtotal _____

Shipping _____

Additional shipping _____

Tax-Deductible

Donation _____

Feel free to photocopy this order form.
FAX ORDERS TO (818) 831-6659

Grand Total _____

MAIL ORDER FORM TO:

Red Hen Press
P.O. Box 3537
Granada Hills, CA 91394

SHIP TO:

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____

Red Hen Press is a small nonprofit literary press.

Please support small independent presses who keep cutting-edge literature alive.

DONATIONS:

Red Hen Press depends on your support. We are a publicly supported organization, and depend on contributions to print catalogs, bring books into print, purchase supplies, and keep the telephone company at bay, in addition to all of the other expenses that keep a small press in business. Since Red Hen Press is a 501(c)(3) organization, your donations are fully tax-deductible.